You can listen to the full recording here

Key points from the webinar:

- The S&P 500 is back into breakeven territory for the year (in US$), while the Nasdaq is at record highs.
- It is “very encouraging” to see positive data points such as surprise job gains, but we still have a “long road to recovery”.
- To date this year (end of May), emerging markets were down 10.30%, with a “wide range” of performance among countries during pandemic due to different capacities for fiscal stimulus, different banking conditions and more.
- It’s possible to paint a “really bullish picture” post-pandemic, with a world full of stimulus with near-zero interest rates and great investment opportunities.
- There is also potential for real reform in response to crisis if countries get on a “sustainable growth trajectory”
- The pandemic has “shone a spotlight” on internet companies and digital rights. Civil unrest is also contributing to heightened awareness of human rights. These conditions are demonstrating “the status quo is not going to cut it anymore; people want change”.
